McKay Moore Sohlberg, Ph.D

Author of Introduction to Cognitive Rehabilitation (1989) and Cognitive Rehabilitation: An Integrative Neuropsychological Approach (2001)

Currently Professor of Health Sciences at University of Oregon

TOPIC: "Living with TBI" [Sponsored by Brain Injury Association of Oregon and Teaching Research]

After survivors of traumatic brain injury receive the initial hospital care, after completion of their post-acute treatment which includes applying 'compensatory strategies' to function in the world with issues of chronic fatigue, impulsivity, memory loss, impairment of executive functions, and many other problems related to their disability, what happens if nothing is working? How are they to carry on with job, family, and community given the subtle impairments to effective functioning with which they must contend? And, most importantly, with their financial resources depleted, their insurance coverage exhausted, where do they and their families turn if they begin to falter, if strategies to compensate begin to erode, if the pressure of life with TBI begins to overwhelm them?

Dr. Sohlberg will discuss treatment options and community support strategies for the post-acute traumatic brain injury survivor and his/her family. Family physicians, school counselors, clinical health professionals, disability legal representatives, and TBI survivors can all benefit from this practical review of effective rehabilitation options.
